

JIMMY 3 SAFES IN MILL ST. OFFICE; FAIL TO GET LOOT

Unsuccessful Attempt Made To Burglarize the Office of Eastburn & Blanche

EARLY THIS MORNING

Doors Ripped Off Fire-Proof Filing Cabinet By The Burglars

A determined but unsuccessful attempt was made during the night to rob the office of Eastburn & Blanche, Mill street. Two safes and a fire-proof steel filing cabinet were battered apart. Both doors of one of the steel vaults were knocked off, while the pins of a large iron safe were removed from the hinges but the doors resisted efforts to loosen them. A large steel chisel was driven in between the door and the door frame of a smaller safe, but it is believed that then the burglars were frightened as the chisel was left driven partly through the frame.

The attempted robbery was discovered this morning by the janitor, Manuel Carish, as he entered the offices at 7.10. The burglars gained entrance through a side window which was left open and through which they must also have made their escape.

The office is located so that the building can be approached from the rear, and it is believed that the burglars came from the rear of the building and then along the side. The window was opened and once inside the burglars worked at their leisure.

One door of the large steel fire-proof filing cabinet was jimmied loose and placed on the floor. The interior of the cabinet was hastily searched but nothing of value found.

A large, old-fashioned steel and iron safe stood next in line and the pins of the hinges of the two doors were removed. The combination lock on the doors held and the efforts to open the safe were unsuccessful.

Evidently the burglars then attacked the smaller iron and steel safe as it was in this that the chisel was found, driven in between the door and the door frame.

It was stated at the Eastburn & Blanche office this morning that nothing of value had been taken.

AWARDED $6.150 VERDICT FOR ACCIDENT INJURIES

Verdict Given in Favor of Miss Kathryn Burns Against South Langhorne Co.

SEPARATE FROM OTHERS

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 15—A verdict for $6,150 for accident injuries in favor of Miss Kathryn Burns, 552 North Pennsylvania Avenue, Morrisville, was rendered late Monday afternoon in Mercer Circuit Court.

The judgment is against William Metting, and his wife, Dora Metting, trading as the Metting Chevrolet Co., of South Langhorne. The Mettings live in Morrisville.

The award is apart from a previous settlement of $3,075 received by Miss Burns from an insurance company representing George Pierson, Mercer County employee, her companion, who was driving her car when the accident occurred December 28, 1935, on South Warren street, in front of the Trent House. The total is $9,225.

Miss Burns, physician testified, sustained injuries affecting the roof of her mouth and teeth, with an operation to be faced in the future. She contended in the suit that the Metting car made a U-turn from behind trucks going north on Warren street, and in front of Miss Burns' car.

The settlement with an insurance company, thereby relieving Pierson from liability, was introduced into the case by the defense. Judge Oliphant later instructed the jury that its verdict as given in court must represent the sum remaining to be paid after deduction of the $3,075 payment. William A. Moore represented Miss Burns, while Louis Rudner appeared for the defendants.

SANTA CLAUS IN FACT, NEW WORLD COUNTERPART OF NUREMBURG, GERMANY, IS ENVISIONED FOR THE TOWN OF "SANTA CLAUS," IND., BY ITS POSTMASTER

Nearly Two Score Manufacturers Willing to Locate There

MAGIC IN THE NAME

But Legal Battle Between Two Corporate Santa Clauses Hinders

By Al F. Casse
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

SANTA CLAUS, Indiana, Dec. 15 (INS)—A Santa Claus in fact, as well as in name—a New World counterpart of Nuremburg, Germany, famed toy-making center of Europe—today was envisioned by Postmaster Oscar L. Phillips, as replacing, in the near future, the quietude of this sleepy little hamlet which now comes to life only during the Yuletide season.

Nearly two score of toy, candy, glove, tobacco and doll manufacturers have signified their willingness to establish factories here. Postmaster Phillips declared, so that they can truthfully stamp their products with the magical words, "from Santa Claus."

Busy plants, belching smoke all the year round, will replace the low, rambling, old-fashioned farm houses, and plodders behind the plows will yield to the workers of a modern toyland, if Postmaster Phillips' dream comes true, as he believes it will.

There is only one thing that stands in the way of the veritable transplanting of Kris Kringle's northland workshops to Santa Claus, Ind., Postmaster Phillips avers. It is a legal battle between two corporate Santa Clauses, Santa Claus of Santa Claus, Indiana, Inc., and Santa Claus, Inc.

Santa Claus of Santa Claus, Inc., is Milton E. Harris, of Vincennes, Ind. It seems that Harris had the foresight to realize that the land at Santa Claus some day would be very valuable. So, on an investment of $25 that made legal an equal number of leases, Harris now controls, for the next 25 years, nearly a thousand acres of land surrounding Santa Claus postoffice. Thus, Harris became the virtual dictator of Santa Claus town.

Santa Claus, Inc., is headed by Carl Barrett, of Chicago, originator of which now is prohibited by a court injunction.

Barrett bought his holdings while they were under lease to Harris.

But the lower courts, Judge Fabius Gwin presiding, in Martin county, sustained the validity of Harris' leases which Barrett and numerous land-owners sought to break. Then the judge issued the permanent injunction which not only halted development of Barrett's Santa Claus park, but infected the manufacturers with fear of paralyzed development of the town.

DAYS FOR CHRISTMAS SHOPPING BECOME FEW

Only Eight More Days, But Busy Season Is Nevertheless A Happy One

SHOPPING SUGGESTIONS

By X'mas Gift Seeker

The time is drawing short! "Only eight more shopping days to Christmas!" is the cry today.

But although the season be a busy one, with the planning and the baking, with the gift seeking, it is a happy time. Happy for little children and for big ones, for it marks the anniversary of the arrival of the Greatest Gift to man.

Shoppers from lower Bucks county are being greatly aided during the trying shopping tours by Bristol merchants. All are eager and anxious to please. Whether it be window shopping or real shopping, all shoppers are bound to have a pleasant and profitable time here these days.

A "puzzle party" is a suggestion for the holidays. A gift of a "puzzle party" purchased at Finegan's Drug Store, Farragut avenue, will mean many happy hours for not only the boy and girl but for the adult. For this box contains many, many pieces of odd shaped metals, fastened together in intriguing patterns. So buy one, and watch your friends try to "puzzle it out." Another suggestion for the little folks is a combination blackboard and desk. Decorated at the top by Mother Goose pictures, the child will delight greatly in the choice.

At Tranotti's Toyland, 425 Jefferson avenue, there is given a suggestion for the doll house of the little girl. Help to furnish the doll's home by providing one of the three-piece wicker sets shown at Tranotti's. Of red, yellow and blue fibre, delicately woven, this set consists of a table, a chair and a settee.

The gift offerings of Fabian's Drug Store, corner of Radcliffe and Mulberry streets, are numerous. In fact so numerous, one hardly knows which to choose. Among those displayed, however, are two very useful yet inexpensive gifts: One a vacuum bottle, which will be doubly welcomed by one who must needs carry daily lunches, this being finished in tones of tan, red and black. Another suggestion is a Yuletide.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1937, by The Baltimore Sun)

WPA—Can We Keep It Up?

IT IS, of course, true, as Mr. Marriner Eccles told a Senate committee, that if the business slump continues, anything like the approximate budget balance promised by the President next year is impossible. However, Mr. Eccles, who was the first advocate of the New Deal theory, now so sick of spending our way back to prosperity, did not touch upon the main cause for this undoubted fact—to wit, the relief situation. That has become the routine, recognized reason for the increasingly precarious state of our national finances. The difference, in good times or bad, between income and outgo is largely the cost of Federal relief.

NO MATTER what other economies are made, so long as relief costs approximate two billion a year, financial equilibrium cannot be recovered, and year by year we will continue to sink deeper into the mire. Every posted man in Washington knows this to be true—and most of them know why. The business slump which, it is estimated, will have added 2,000,000 to the roll of the unemployed by February, certainly will greatly increase the weight and cost of the relief load. Mayors of every big city are insisting upon heavier ap-

AGED MAN FATALY BURNED AS HE FILLS OILSTOVE ON RETIRING; MAKES WAY DOWNSTAIRS AS CLOTHES BURN

Kostonty Kasperowicz, 65, Croydon, Breathes His Last As Neighbor Tears Burning Clothing From Man Writhing On Floor—Firemen Believe Oil Exploded As Attempt Was Made to Refill Oil Stove in Second-Floor Bedroom

CROYDON, Dec. 15—An aged man was fatally burned last night while alone in a house on Wyoming avenue. The victim, Kostonty Kasperowicz, 65, apparently was filling an oil stove when the flames ignited his clothing. His cries for help and his moans of suffering were heard by Vinton Edwards, residing across the street. Edwards ran to the house and breaking through the front door found Kasperowicz writhing on the floor of a rear room. His clothing was afire and he was frantic with pain.

Edwards tore the burning clothes off the man as he breathed his last. Croydon firemen had been summoned and upon their arrival extinguished the blaze in two rooms on the second floor, where evidently the victim had been preparing for bed.

Kasperowicz is the second Bucks county man to die of burns since Sunday midnight.

It was about 11.40 when the cries of Kasperowicz were first heard by Edwards. The house is occupied by a group of Democrats as a club house and Kasperowicz occupied a second-floor room which he rented. He lived alone in the house and the club members never visited his quarters. In one room was a bed, a chair and the man's belongings. A small oil stove was in the center of the room, and after the fire had been extinguished it was found that the stove was open and the cap off the oil tank. A small oil can was nearby but it had been blown to pieces, evidently by an explosion. A lighted flashlight was on the floor. It is reasoned that Kasperowicz had attempted to fill the stove while it was still lighted, and that the flames from the stove ignited the oil in the can which he was holding. When the oil can blew apart it is believed that oil was splattered about Kasperowicz. The flames soon enveloped him. Then he ran to a smaller room nearby and there his burning clothes set fire to a chair. The man, by this time a living torch, then made his way down the stairway to the first floor, where he fell on the floor of what is used as a bar-room. He was in this position when found by Edwards.

Croydon firemen did good work in confining the flames to the one room, and little damage was done other than to the furniture.

Kasperowicz had resided in this vicinity for a number of years. He was about 65 years of age and so far as is known has no relatives. He received an old-age pension.

William L. Stackhouse, former Bucks county fire marshal, but who resigned as he is now sheriff-elect; Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo, and Deputy Coroner Dr. James Lawler, were all summoned and went to the scene. An investigation was made by the authorities, but it was decided that Kasperowicz's death was accidental and was due to third degree burns. The body was taken to Menden's morgue in Bristol.

Miss Martha C. Hughes, in a short talk, stated that it is with much satisfaction that it is noted Mrs. Bibb Graves, recently appointed U. S. senator from Alabama is an active member of the W. C. T. REWARD FOR ACHIEVEMENT

As they motor along these days, few realize the importance of the technical processes behind the gas their cars use. To most persons it is sufficient to "fill her up" and step on the accelerator. That there are valued processes essential to production of the gas that is obtained from the pump at the filling station is illustrated by the gold medal which the American Institute of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers has just presented to Henry L. Doherty, long identified with the production of gas and oil, for distinguished achievement in improving the practice of finding and producing petroleum.

Through long scientific experimentation, Mr. Doherty discovered that if sufficient gas pressure is kept on pools of oil deep under the surface greater fluidity is maintained and the oil flows more easily to wells at a considerable distance. If the gas is permitted to escape the oil becomes heavier and is more inclined to remain in the sand. From Mr. Doherty's discoveries, came the system of unit operation of oil pools, now required by law in the United States, Mexico and Colombia. It was his plan that brought about the recognition by law of the unit nature of oil pools owned by various surface holders. This principle has been endorsed by the Federal Oil Conservation Board, the National Petroleum Institute and the Institute which bestowed the Anthony F. Lucas gold medal on Mr. Doherty. The medal has been awarded on only one previous occasion.

Commenting on the award, Congressman Samuel B. Pettengill, of Indiana, of the powerful Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives and an authority on oil, said, "Mr. Doherty fought for sound principles in petroleum when few fought on his side. He is now recognized at his true worth, a statesman in industry."

LOCOMOTIVES RISE AND FALL

Perhaps no question is more nearly uppermost in the public mind these days than: "Isn't it too bad they're doing away with those big, monster old-style locomotives?"

If that question isn't uppermost in the public mind, it had better be, and rather soon, for old-style locomotives are disappearing like nobody's business. Suggestions: "National Iron Horse Week."

What have these newfangled streamlined engines got that plain ordinary locomotives haven't got? So that's it—they offer less wind resistance, the sissies!

Imagine a powerful railroad engine pulling away from the wind instead of showing it who is master. Next these streamlined locomotives so-called will be equipped with whistles piping, "Hyah, toots!" more or less as the French ones do.

Small wonder that certain engineers of the old school are plumb disgusted.

What engineer wants to go swishing through the night as with a scissors, instead of having a rip-roaring fight with it all the way and telling it where it gets off the track? Streamline—sassafras!

No man living is so smart that nothing puzzles him, but many are that dumb.

Thrill is the simple art of making money faster than your family can spend it.

COMMUNICATION

Editor, Courier:

We are approaching the Holiday Season and the many things we have to do, undoubtedly, have caused some of us to forget to purchase the Christmas Seals which were sent to us. It is hoped that we may expect these belated contributions promptly. Your purchase of these seals will help to make a "Merry Christmas" for many a kiddie in your county.

During the past year there was an average of 13 deaths every day in Pennsylvania due to tuberculosis. Each year in the United States alone approximately 10,000 children die of tuberculosis despite the fact that it is curable and preventable.

Your contribution to this work is an investment rather than a gift. You pay for Christmas Seals only once but they work for you all the year 'round. Help us to attain our goal of $3,500 for the work during the coming year. Money paid for these tiny seals helps spread the knowledge that saves lives.

Wishing you a Merry Christmas, a profitable New Year and Good Health,
Sincerely yours,
HAROLD H. KELLER,
President,

propositions, vehemently protesting any cut. Obviously, if there are more men out of work, more money will be needed to take care of them—that is if the present system of dispensing and distributing relief is adhered to.

"GIVE HER WINGS" by MARIE BLIZARD

CHAPTER XIX

Julie's bronze hair curled in ringlets on her moist brow. She brushed them back and opened her eyes as wide as she could. They felt sticky and her lids, from lack of sleep, were sensitive to the points of her long lashes. She parted her dry lips, licking them quickly, and smiled into a camera.

She held up her hand. "Are you sure you'll only take a picture of my head?" she demanded of the news cameraman.

"Promises," he said and snapped.

It was the last picture before they climbed into the plane. Julie had been firm about getting them all finished before she was buckled into the ungainly parachute which was strapped to her waist and legs. The parachute arrangement did not contribute to the grace of her figure. Not that she took any pleasure in her own grace at that moment; she felt nuzzled, unlovely in the hot sunlight at the flying field in Brooklyn.

Her silk shirt clung to her shoulders. The weight of the parachute, which would serve as a cushion, dragged at her hips. In the borrowed riding boots, her toes pinched. Her nose was shiny, but her pose was gallant.

Kincaid gave her his hand and, with the little unconscious grace of a boy she swung into the rear cockpit of the low wing cabin plane.

An attendant handed in her helmet, her leather jacket, a packet of sandwiches and a thermos bottle containing coffee. She pulled the helmet on leaving it unstrapped. She leaned out of the small cockpit, waved to Jean Vance, to the small crowd at the field and closed the window.

The plane quivered as the propeller turned over. So did Julie.

She tried to see ahead of her and could see only the flaps on the wings which Jerry had told her were to serve as airbrakes. He'd told her a lot of other things about controllable pitch propellers, mechanical pilots, indicators and such things in which she had no interest. He knew about them, he was flying the plane, let him look after them. All she had to do was amuse herself and look as pretty and intelligent as possible when it was necessary. If anyone asked her about her job as radio operator, she was to look modest and plead that she was too tired to discuss it.

The throttle opened wide. She watched the needle on her dash for a few seconds and then, uninterested, returned her gaze to the field over which they skimmed on the precise dot of ten o'clock that July morning. They took off smoothly and were winging West.

Julie wished that the cabin was not enclosed; she wanted to look out. There wouldn't have been much to see, she noted, watching the swift rise of the altitude indicator.

She settled down as comfortably as she could on the small, confining seat which was cushioned with her parachute. It wasn't uncomfortable but it wasn't pleasant.

For a few minutes, Julie repeated to herself the words of instruction in the use of her parachute. But, having made sure of what she would do if she had to—and could remember—it was no longer an entertaining thought. In fact, it was a disturbing thought.

She fastened her eyes on the back of Kincaid's head. That wasn't very interesting either. She looked over the dash board, the dummy radio set, the telephone, Kincaid had told her about that, but cautioned her that he would have his mind on other matters and the telephone was not for social conversation. She stretched her legs as well as she was able, and from one of the pockets in her leather jacket she extracted a magazine.

The steady thrum thrum of the engine passed through her body, its rhythm disturbing her at first and later, combined with the limitations of her seating space making her feel numb. The black type waver-ing unsteadily made her eyes burn. She closed her eyes—

Kincaid's voice awakened her: "We're over Cleveland!"

She felt pleased, as though she had done it. Then she looked at her watch and saw that it was less than two hours since they had taken off from Brooklyn. Her legs were asleep, her toes tortured in the boots. Her whole figure was cramped and there was nothing that she could do about it. Also, she was hungry. She decided not to open her sandwiches. There was no telling how long they would be in the air. Besides, she'd save them for later to break the monotony.

The next hour was not monotonous. It was climaxed by fear. They ran into thunder storms, rode above them while lightning flashed about them, penetrating her tightly shut eyes. She tried desperately to remember if planes had lightning rods and if there could be a lightning rod to stave off that terrible, darting fire.

Then they were through them and white clouds floated beneath them in the blue expanse where they were two tiny mites in a beetle travelling madly through space. Her tension relaxed and she drank a little of her coffee.

She read another short story, tried to read a second one and found that she couldn't concentrate on it. The altitude indicator was fixed at 13,000 feet. She wondered how long it would take to fall thirteen thousand feet, wondered how high the mountains were.

She called on all the resources of her brain to recall geography, history she had learned in school. That occupation didn't take long and she was soon bored. Time had stood still. The earth was far below them. Perhaps there wasn't any more earth.

In Fayette, Cosy would be washing the lunch dishes. Althea was probably breaking her neck to get to the bridge at the Holt's. They were all having a lovely time and not giving a single thought to her. She felt very lonely.

At two o'clock she opened her sandwiches and munched on one trying to make the process last as long as possible. She wished Kincaid would talk to her but she knew better than to pick up her own telephone.

She hunched her shoulders, by now wrapped in the leather coat, and closed her eyes. When she opened them she ached all over. Her discomfort was unbearable. She was cold, cramped and worn out from the vibration. She felt so unhappy, she couldn't even look in the mirror of her vanity.

Then she heard Kincaid's voice again.

"How're you doin', sister?"

"Okay," she answered, "outside of the fact that I'm in agony, I think I'm paralyzed."

"Rub your arms and legs and twist around from the waist. Stretch! You'll be okay."

"Are we nearly there?"

"Hitting for Kansas City and doing swell. We passed Chicago an hour ago. We may run into some dust storms. Don't let it scare you."

Nothing could frighten her more than the electric storms, she thought. Then they ran into the dust storm and she choked, cried helplessly, said her prayers and was exhausted emotionally and physically when they emerged from them and struck Denver. They were heading for Burbank, California.

Strangely enough, the last hours were not as bad as the first. Kincaid assured her that the end was the easiest and there would be no more storms. She settled down to contemplating the future that would begin, she hoped, within a few hours.

In that future she meant to have a home like Jean Vance's. She wouldn't be too ambitious and want a place like the Cartrights' with stables and a landing field. No, indeed, she would have no use for a landing field.

A place like Jean Vance's—a modest little white house on Sutton

Place. Only two floors and a view of the East River. It didn't occur to her for a moment that the "little place" on Sutton Place cost more to rent and run in one month than the Allerdycs family lived on for nearly a year.

There'd be a library and a dining-room with dark green walls. There'd be a bedroom in fuchsia and white. Her guest rooms, like the one in which she had spent a sleepless, excited night, would have thick carpets, diaphanous curtains, smart modern furniture. Her maid would wear pink gingham in the morning and maroon taffeta in the afternoon.

She'd bring Julie's breakfast to her on a tray. Julie had a vision of herself, lovely, still flushed with sleep, sitting up among satin and lace pillows, wearing a chiffon bed-jacket, reading her mail.

The name on the letters wasn't quite clear. Would it be Mrs. Richard Jessup or would it be some name she didn't yet know?

Tommy had said to give herself a chance to fall in love. She wondered with what kind of a man she might fall in love. Love was something she hadn't ever experienced. Probably never would except in her romantic dramatizations. But those men of whom she had dreamed had been forceful ones. She had never known a forceful man unless it was Tommy Jessup.

Tommy Jessup! A fine husband he'd make, telling his wife not to do this and not to do that. My lord and master! She gave a contemptuous shake of her head and discovered she had a crick in her neck. She wondered if anyone cared as much as she to have Jerry Kincaid get that plane out of the skies in record breaking time.

The skies were changing. It was almost seven by her watch and instead of getting darker the sky was getting brighter with mid-afternoon light.

She dreamed on, fitting herself pleasantly into the new background she had seen so briefly. The night before she had hoped that Jean would suggest visiting a night-club, lending her a gown. But Jean had been tired from the all-day drive and Jerry had agreed that a good night's sleep was best for Julie.

She began to think of what might happen when they landed. Perhaps this night there would be gala parties. Her spirit yearned toward them but her flesh protested in every joint.

She gave the altimeter a casual glance, saw that they were flying lower. A mere ten thousand feet. Then it was eight thousand and they leveled off.

Her watch registered a quarter to eight.

Kincaid's telephone clicked: "We'll be down in twenty minutes! Burbank! Nice going, youngsters! I've radioed the field."

The connection was shut off.

Julie blew out her breath and gathered a second speed. Her numb fingers found the make-up kit in her pocket. She rubbed her arms, manipulated her fingers and went to work busily with a dab of cotton and her cold cream. Her eyes looked tired but excitement, now that her moment was near, sent sparkle from their depths. She powdered her nose and touched a lipstick to her mouth.

She had expected they would be arriving in the evening, forgetting that it was four o'clock in the afternoon in California. They dropped altitude and she saw the green earth, houses, people.

She snatched off her helmet, ran a comb through the mass of her hair and prepared her smile for the photographers and her opening line:

"It was glorious! And I'm so proud to have had a small part in Jerry's achievement. But please... please don't ask me to talk about it now! Jerry will tell you everything!"

ted that it would cut down the enormous overhead expense of the WPA, reduce the pay roll and eliminate a great many jobholders.

IN DEFENSE of the WPA are the old arguments that it is better for the country to provide some sort of work for those whom the Government must support and better for the general morale of those who have to be supported. For these reasons the Administration has taken the stand that the straight dole is "unthinkable" for American citizens and that the WPA system is worth what it costs, because it preserves the self-respect of the recipients of Federal largess. Wholly aside from the fact that the work is largely of such flimsy and phony character that the self-respect argument becomes ridiculous the hard, economic realities which now confront us would seem to force a change in policy.

THE SIMPLE truth is that if every contention in favor of the WPA were sound; if it provided useful work for every recipient; if it saved their self-respect and preserved the morale, which it does not—if all these things were true, the fact remains that we can't afford it. We can't afford it in the best of times; in bad times it becomes "unthinkable." Saturated with politics, it is the greatest example of waste the world has ever seen. It would seem that when the time arrives, next season, to make the great relief appropriations, there would at least be some voices raised in favor of abolishing the whole WPA system and substituting some method by which the Federal funds could be distributed to the distressed unemployed through local, state and community agencies. It would save half the money, hurt no one's morale and no one would starve. It would seem that the time had arrived when members of Congress well might ask whether it is worth while to sink a whole nation in order, theoretically, to preserve the problematical self-respect of a small and unfortunate minority.

FASHION PARADE

By Orry-Kelly
(Famous Hollywood Stylist Writing
For International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—With resorts beckoning at this time of the year and with many important cities plotting World Fairs in the near future, it's no wonder feminine Hollywood has become most luggage conscious. Lugage, to the woman who travels, is as much a part of her wardrobe as her handbag or hat. Consequently it must blend in as well with her costumes.

Jane Bryan, who has just returned from the Palm Springs opening in time to begin work in "A Slight Case of Murder" with Edward G. Robinson, likes her bags in a creamy shade of leather. For a Palm Springs week-end she carries only one square case and her make-up box of matching leathers.

The suit-case, of course, equipped with hangars and an ingenious device for keeping her dresses smooth, plus separate compartments for shoes and hats. The make-up box has come to be a travel necessity since it has partitions for bottles and jars and there is no chance of their breaking. Jane believes brown is the most serviceable color for traveling, so finds that her luggage blends well with her most usual costume choice.

Women have never had so much consideration from the designers of bags and cases as they have this year. Not only are they planned to keep her clothes in perfect condition, but they are constructed so lightly the slightest woman can life one. "Airplane," "Airweight," "Lightweight,"
and "Featherweight" are new descriptive terms for 1937 luggage.

Girls like Lili Damita, Grace Bradley and Anita Louise who prefer to travel by air are particularly enthusiastic about the new lightweight luggage. When the number of pounds one may carry is limited, these new streamlined cases are a great boon.

When Anita Louise goes on one of her extended trips to New York by plane she carries three bags and yet holds the total number of pounds down to thirty-five. One is a dress case with featherweight wooden hangers, another is a fitted square with place for shoes and hats, while the third is a convenient box, with mirror-lined top, for jars and bottles. All of these have three-ply wood frames,
are covered with a light but sturdy fabric and have edges bound in leather.

Since Anita favors grey or navy for traveling her bags are a combination of the two colors. The fabric is grey with three navy stripes and all the leather is navy blue.

HOLLYWOOD—(INS)—It's easy to let gloves become the orphan of the wardrobe, but the fashion-wise woman knows they have saved more than one costume from oblivion. Then, too, this fall they have taken on such definite character that it will be fun to select distinctive ones.

Newest and most important of glove facts is that a black costume no longer requires black gloves. Now it is infinitely more amusing to have gloves running the gamut from shell pink through rosy red to wine to lift black from the doldrums. Other colors, too, are important with black such as the chrysanthemum yellow Joan Blondell selects and then does not repeat again
in the all-black ensemble.

Most daytime gloves are still short,
but for evening wear there is an increasing tendency toward the elbow-length glove. In Warner Bros. "Hollywood Hotel" Mabel Todd wears short lobster red suede gloves with a grey tweed suit. This spicy combination is an example of the ideal accessory choice for tweed which has suddenly developed into the season's darling.
If a tweed is multi-colored it's a good idea to decide on the most predominant nub in it and unite the suit with gloves of that color.

There is plenty of novelty in street gloves as well as formal ones. Shirley Deane has a pair that are yellow suede with side finger insets of carnelian.
She wears them with a tweed dress flecked in these colors. Ann Dvorak has a pair of soft grey dooskin gloves cut with very square fingers and each one is whipped over with narrow doeskin strips of Kelly green. They are nice with a grey suit.

Come evening now and the plain white kid glove gives way to a more ornate type. Some of them are trimmed from wrist to elbow. Many of them are beaded in gold; others are embroidered in large, colorful che-villie dots and some are splendid with sequin designs.

Santa Claus In Fact, Seen
For "Santa Claus," Ind.

toy-making capital of the world, as visualized by Postmaster Phillips.

The suit of Santa Claus, Inc., versus Santa Claus, of Santa Claus, Ind., Inc., is now pending before the Indiana Appellate Court, on an appeal from the decision of the lower courts
by the former corporation.

It is this litigation which is holding up, from a manufacturing standpoint,
the development of Santa Claus, Ind.,
as the Nuremberg of America.

But the case never will be decided by the courts, Postmaster Phillips hinted, because the principals involved will soon get together.

"I understand that the manufacturers concerned in settling their interests here have told those men to come to an agreement before it is too late," Phillips whispered. He made it clear that he was taking no sides in the controversy.

"I believe those fellows are starting to realize that half a loaf for each will be better than none at all. I learned they soon will get together in Chicago to iron out their differences,"
Phillips declared.

These manufacturers do not want to sink their money into factory sites and railroad sidings only to find that they have been left "holding the bag," Phillips pointed out.

But every cloud has a silver lining.

The silver lining of this one is that there will be no more corporate Santa Claus permitted in the state of Indiana. Joseph O. Hoffman, state corporation counsel has contended that "employing the name of Santa Claus corporately usurps the common property of all mankind."

And sustaining Hoffman's contention, the Department of State rejected a recent application to incorporate the name, "Christmas with Santa Claus, Santa Claus, Indiana." It explained its position as follows:

"This office has taken the position that Santa Claus is either a geographical name, a postoffice address in this state, or it is the name of a mythical being. It is such a name in strict justice and law that cannot become the subject of an exclusive prop-rietorship."

No foreign corporation can do business in Indiana without consent of the Department of State.

All indications are that Santa Claus,
Ind., will do the biggest job in Yuletide history. An anticipated one million pieces of mail are expected to be cancelled by the much-sought cancellation mark, "Santa Claus, Ind."

Windsor's Problem Unsolved Year After Abdication

Despite the fact that it was a year ago, on Dec. 10, that Edward VIII of Great Britain abdicated his throne to become Duke of Windsor, his husband of the former Wallis Warfield Simpson, his problem is still unsolved. His course is still to be established and his future has yet to be defined. Every move and action bears international complications which preclude him assuming the status of a mere private individual. Apparently he is not content to merely pass his life as a private citizen and social lion, but seeks some mission in life. Only the future will determine what part he will play. Meanwhile he is marking time and virtually playing the role of "man without a country."

PRESENT SEVENTEEN
"B's" TO OWL GRIDDERS

By Louis Tomlinson

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Dec. 15.—In the school assembly program, Coach George Reimer presented 14 varsity gridmen and three varsity managers with their Bensalem varsity "B's" as a result of their work during the past campaign. Of the 14 who received varsity letters for actual football performance, no less than nine of them were seniors and will be lost to the team next year. This will put a big hole in the '38 squad for all of them played regularly and since the Owls didn't enjoy a very successful season this year, they will have to step even to touch their '37 record next year.

The Seniors who received their last Bensalem football letter were: Captain Hal Robinson, fullback; Vic Swadis, end; Fran Borman, tackle; Al Marshall, tackle; Bob McGovern, center; John Chapman, center; Charles Bauer, guard; Bill Getz, guard; and Charlie Devine, tackle.

The other five were Jack Scarborough, quarterback; Bob Scarborough, half back; Joe Cahill, half back; Bob Whyte, quarterback, and Norm Tettemer, end. The managers were Joe Dedrick, senior manager, and his two junior assistant managers, Gene Snyder and James Hutton.

In return for their letters, Captain Hal Robinson presented Coaches Reimer and Carson with travelling kits in behalf of the squad. All the lettermen then elected Jack Scarborough, Junior and quarterback, as captain for 1938.

Bensalem is now busy preparing for their 1937-38 basketball campaign which opens Friday at Bensalem when both the boys and girls encounter Lower Merion High. The Owls are being coached by Junior High School teachers, Lloyd Seacrist and Dan Charles, under the supervision of head coach of athletics, George Reimer. The latter will again coach the

2 SLAM-BANG WRESTLERS
TO MEET IN BOUT TONIGHT

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 15.—A slam-bang contest is slated for the Arena tonight when two of the foremost bruisers of the mat game, George Kovarly, ace Hollywood badman, tangles with Rebel Rob Russell, belligerent southern wrestler.

It will be a one fall, one hour time limit contest and there is bound to be fireworks from the moment that they enter the ring. Both have compiled working records at the Arena, and last week they both scored victories. Kovarly downed the classy Nick Campofreda after a thrilling battle that saw the tide of victory swing from one man to another. Russell engaged Bobby Roberts, Canadian Pole, in a match that stole the show. It was a ding dong battle from start to finish and the fans were hoarse from cheering. The outstanding event on Russell's record was a one hour draw with Ernie Dusek.

The balance of the card is in keeping with the windup. Cliff Olson, the mad Swede, will vie with Campofreda in the semi-windup. This bout brings together two of the best action providers in the game.

Two of the biggest men in the game, Mayes McLain, former Iowa football star, and Mike Masurki, former Manhattan College gridiron hero, will vie in this encounter.

Carol "Frenchy" LaRue, Roobling troumanian, will make his first appearance in front of his host of friends, against the vaunted Nick Elitch, acrobatic Jugo-Slav.

Filpo Wilcox, Oklahoma Indian, will tangle with George Kondylas, bemustached Greek, in the opening setto.

Acknowledged greatest story of the year pictorially and in news, was the burning of the dirigible Hindenburg, which exploded over Lakehurst, N. J., Naval Air Station, with a loss of 33 lives. Guglielmo Marconi, inventor of wireless telegraphy, died July 29. Jean Harlow, the glamor girl of Hollywood, died June 8. Getulio Vargas outlawed all political parties over Brazil. The "World's greatest romance" climaxed in the marriage of the Duke of Windsor, former King of England, and Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson, of Baltimore, Md. They were wed June 3 at Monte Carlo. Greatest war picture ever printed was that illustrating Japan's invasion of China, and showing a baby crying among debris of the South Station, of Shanghai, its mother and father killed during the bombardment. In late January mid-west floods took unprecedented toll of lives and property damage as the Ohio and Mississippi rivers went on a rampage. The greatest U. S. passenger airline tragedy, in numbers, occurred when a trans-continental airliner plunged into a peak of the Uinta mountains of Utah, October 17, killing nineteen. Premier Benito Mussolini returned the visit to Italy of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler, with five-day tour of Germany, September 25, consolidating the Rome-Berlin axis against Communism. Veronica Gedeon was murdered March 28, in New York, in the much-publicized triple "murder of the model." Tragedy unfolded was caused in the disastrous explosion March 18 at the New London, Texas, Consolidated School, in which 427 lost their lives, mostly children. Strike violence of the year reached its peak in the vicious fight, May 30, between South Chicago, Illinois, policemen and steel strikers. Five died of gunshot wounds, and over 100 were injured. Amidst great pomp and ceremony, May 12, in Westminster Abbey, George VI, was crowned King of England. John D. Rockefeller, 97-year-old oil baron, died May 27. On a round-the-world flight, Amelia Earhart, famed aviatrix, was reported missing, July 2, "somewhere among the islands of the South Pacific." Senator Hugo Black, of Alabama, on August 12, was nominated to the United States Supreme Court to fill vacancy caused by retirement of Justice Willis Van Devanter. Black withstood "Ku Klux" charges to remain on the bench. — (International Illustrated News)
